

A Zane Special!

Or...

The Almost Transposition of Two Signed Playing cards!

Zane has taken the 'Anniversary Waltz' card trick plot to the absolute limit!

The Effect:

1. A playing card is selected from a deck of cards by a spectator who then signs stickers which are stuck on the face and back of his card. The card is clearly placed to one side in full view.
2. Another spectator selects a different card for the magician, and the magician also signs stickers sticking them on the face and back of his card.
3. Now the spectator is asked to hold their card tightly between their first finger and thumb, and the magician does the same with his card.
4. He then announces that he will cause the two cards to change places!
5. After some comedy byplay where the magician states, "now the hardest part of the trick is to make them come back again!" The spectators aren't very impressed because it's clear the two cards are still in the same position as before. But here is when you knock them for six!
6. When the two cards are turned over to everyone's utter amazement they see the two cards must have changed places or, that is, half of the cards did because the face from one card is fused with the face of the other card still with both signatures on it and the back from one card is unbelievably fused with the back of the other still with both signatures on it!
7. But that's not all! The magician then says, "hey! Look we must have been holding the cards too tightly."
8. When the spectator and the magician let go of the cards, to everyone's utter bewilderment, they see, still in the shape of where their fingers were, the magicians card indices is left printed on the back design of the transposed spectators card back & likewise the magicians transposed card face still has part of the spectators back design printed on it where his fingers were? Proving beyond doubt the transposition of two signed playing cards – Well the almost transposition of two signed playing cards!!!!
